Major Peninsula Highway Projects Listed In Report To State Commerce Body

Major highway building projects needed in San Mateo county to bring the state highway system up to the standard desired for maximum benefit were considered by the California State Chamber of Commerce's committee on highways in San Francisco yesterday.

Before them was the report of C. H. Purcell, state highway engineer, recommending the necessary projects. Oscar L. Willette presided as chairman of the Central Coast Regional Council committee's meeting.

The program necessary to complete the state highway system in San Mateo county is enumerated as follows:

(1) San Francisco to Colma, 1.8 miles. Improvement of this section by grading, paving and installation of structures to provide a wide multi-lane highway.

(2) Baden to San Bruno, 2.8 miles. To be graded to 56 foot width, small structures and pavement to be 40 feet wide, with oil rock shoulders.

(3) San Mateo to Beresford, 1.74 miles. Grading to 56 foot width, small structures and pavement widened to 40 feet with oil rock shoulders.

(4) Beresford to Redwood City, 4.25 miles. Grading to 56 foot width, small structures, paving to 40 foot width and oil rock shoulders.

(5) Redwood City to southerly boundary, 3.46 miles. Grading to be 56 feet wide, including small structures, pavement to 40 foot width, and oil rock shoulders. This improvement provides in San Mateo county a minimum four lane pavement, and surfaced shoulders on a 56 foot graded roadbed.

The total improvement on route 2, San Francisco to San Diego, covering 391.8 miles, will cost approximately $25,623,447.04

Similar studies covering route 55, that portion of the Skyline boulevard, San Francisco to route 5 near Glenwood, which lies in San Mateo county; and on route 68, that portion of the Bayshore boulevard, San Francisco to San Jose, which lies in San Mateo county, will be completed within the next week or 10 days and will be made public.

NEED IS SEEN FOR NEW FORM OF CO. GOV'T

San Carlos Audience Told Improvements Are Necessary

SAN CARLOS. — The need for a new charter for San Mateo county that will take the place of the present antiquated system of government was emphasized by members of the San Mateo County Charter Study Committee at a meeting of the San Mateo County Federated Improvement Clubs held at the city hall here Wednesday evening.

Attorney John Davis of Burlingame talked on the question of consolidating all road and highway work under the jurisdiction of a board of works instead of the road districts which are now operated under the law of 1856, classified as "the horse and buggy days." He explained that the governmental affairs of the county should be put on a strictly business-like basis. Under the present method the county must get approval from the state legislature before it can make any change in the management of its governmental affairs. This means that assemblymen and other members of the legislature from all over the state, under the present system, have a right to vote as to what is needed in San Mateo county's government. "At the present time we are operating under the genera llaws of the state and theerefore have no direct voice in our own county affairs," Davis said.

Means Home Rule

Attorney Arthur H. Redington of Hillsborough told the people that "a county charter form of government will give San Mateo county citizens a direct voice in the affairs of our county. It will mean home rule. It will avoid the necessity of presenting a bill to the state legislature whenever any proposed changes are needed. Many difficulties are encountered working under a ram-shackle form of government. We have to wait two years before necessary changes can be made. The best thing is to have our own government, where we can find out our needs which can be rectified without having to wait two years. We need an executive head in the management of our government."

Goldman Speaks

"San Mateo county is on the threshold of great development. We must plan now for a government that will keep pace with this impending development," said Heim Goldman, another speaker.

"In this county there exist 72 distinct forms of government, many overlapping each other, resulting in inefficiency. The charter study committee is planning to centralize authority, instead of dividing it into so many different forms. The committee is only a fact finding body, said Goldman, and after it obtains the information wanted it will pass it on to the freeholders. "We are not trying to railroad anything," he said. "A charter will modernize our county government and permit local citizens to direct the planning and development of our county. A charter would mean our government costs would be cut."

Fred H. Drake of San Carlos was of the opinion "that the people of San Mateo county are buying too much government. The cost of operating our government is getting so that they will be taking our homes from us." The people of San Mateo county do not take enough interest in the affairs of the county, he said.

Road Costs Hit

James S. James, county surveyor, said that he was glad to see the movement which would reduce government expenditures. James said it was about time that something was done in lessening road expenditures in San Mateo county.

John Harkness of Redwood City presided in the absence of Louis Chess, president.

Delegates and friends from Daly City to Palo Alto crowded the auditorium.

Mayor John E. Cowgill made a few opening remarks.

HELD IN CHECK CASE

Jack Davis, 41, sign painter, was held in custody of the county jail by Redwood City police and faces a charge of forging a check for $4 in the name of his former wife. The check was passed on a local cigar store and the proprietor took the complaint to police and the district attorney.

Wait Anxiously As Winnie Fights For Life

The Rev. and Mrs. H. J. McKinnell, Darlington, Ind., and their son, Burton, snapped in an anteroom of the Phoenix, Ariz., courthouse as their daughter, Mrs. Winnie Ruth Judd, began a fight to escape hanging for the alleged murder of two of her girl friends. Her relatives were not permitted in the courtroom because they were to be witnesses. Below, part of the crowd that fought to get into the courtroom.

PLANNERS, COUNCIL TO CONSIDER SEGREGATION OF BAYSHORE TRAFFIC

The city planning commission wants to know what the council's attitude is concerning the subjects of traffic segregation on the Bayshore highway and the hanging of banners over streets.

A letter from John Gill, secretary of the commission, invited the council to attend a meeting at the city hall next Monday night at 7:30 to discuss these and other matters. It was read by City Clerk B. E. Myers Monday, and the invitation was accepted.

The council adjourned Monday night's meeting to the 25th, so that it could consider, at the same time, a proposed amendment to the ordinance regulating taxicabs in the city. A related matter is the application of Mr. Henderson for a taxi license He now operates the Emerald Lake bus line, and plans to cover the North Fair Oaks territory also.

Attorney Norman Menifee represented Henderson Monday. Attorney Joseph Bullock, who was not present, but who is counsel for the taxicab operators, who are protesting Henderson's application, will be notified to attend next Monday's meeting, when all these matters will be taken up by the council after it meets with the planners.

License Cut Asked

The councilmen received two petitions for decreases in the amount of business licenses for individuals or small firms engaged in delivering such things as potato chips, or cookies, to stores for resale. A spokesman for the petitioners said that the sum of $25 a year charged by Redwood City was too high; and that it would force the "little fellows" out of business. He thought $8 a fairer fee.

Reference of the matter to City Attorney Mansfield and City Manager Rolison was voted, on motion of Councilman Beeger.

Attorney A. J. Stebenne appeared for Antonio Monteverde in regard to a refund of $100 on delinquent taxes, which was granted in accordance with an agreement whereby certain obligations to the city were met.

The application of George Hirsch, 435 Clinton, for a reduction in taxes, was referred to the city collector for study. No action can be taken until next year, the board said.

The application of Peter Logan for a license to conduct a poolroom at 2305 El Camino Real was granted, when Chief of Police C. L. Collins said he had no objection.

Extra Signal Dropped

City Manager Rolison estimated the cost of an additional traffic signal at Broadway and El Camino Real at $125, if located on the southeasterly corner of the intersection. The council felt the expense was not justified, since, in the opinion of police, the intersection is now adequately protected.

On motion of Councilman Dusel, the council adopted a resolution taking steps to ascertain the sentiment of property owners on Main street regarding the proposal to install electroliers from Maple street to Five Points. Petitions for this work are now before the council.

The city attorney warned the council that action must soon be taken if any bond issues are to be put on the forthcoming city election. Councilman McCarthy, asked about the playground bond issue proposed last fall, said he saw little hope for its passage. He expressed himself as in favor of the idea, "even in these hard times," but he could summon no optimism concerning the ultimate outcome of a bond issue. He offered to sound out the sentiment of the citizens' park and playground committee, of which he is the chairman.

Mayor Daniel Stafford announced that Councilmen Beeger, Lambert and McCarthy had been appointed as a committee to acquire a site for a city reservoir.

Unemployed in Distress

The mayor complimented the committee which is supplying needy families of the unemployed with food, and named Zepho Thorning and Carl Stoner in particular. He said that $250, part of the fund voted by the city to relieve unemployment, and not used during the past month, largely on account of inclement weather, might well be turned over to the committee. On motion of Councilman Lambert, this was was done. Much of the food used comes from the Community Cupboard boxes sponsored by The Tribune. These are located in food stores throughout the city, and shoppers are invited to drop cans and packages of food into them.

Mayor Stafford said that many were unable to pay for water, light, gas or rent, and that the situation was serious. He could think of no immediate solution, but urged his colleagues to give thought to the matter. He estimated that the average indebtedness was $200, and that approximately $10,000 "had to be written off by somebody" in the community.

Councilman McCarthy started a discussion on dog licenses, and the board indicated that it would consider further the possibility of revising the tax, which is now $2 for males and $4 for females. The city pound is not self supporting, it was pointed out.

MRS. HOWARD DISAPPROVED AS GUARDIAN

Suspension Of Her Power In Court May Follow

Strongly indicating that he would suspend the powers of Mrs. Fannie Howard, Hillsborough society matron, as guardian of her boy, Robert S. Howard, 15, Menlo School student, Superior Judge George H. Buck took the matter under advisement yesterday.

He will rule on the question Saturday, he indicated.

Judge Buck at the same time announced that he would not remove Mrs. Howard as the boy's guardian without a full hearing in her presence. Suspension of her powers, if decided upon, will be based on the fact that Mrs. Howard has been away in Europe since October and that the boy's care is in the hands of a servant.

Father Also Disapproves

Charles S. Howard, San Francisco and Los Angeles automobile magnate, and his sons, Charles and Lindsay, join in seeking to have the mother removed as the boy's guardian. Mrs. Howard has been estranged from her husband for some years, and she will obtain a final decree of divorce this coming May.

On the stand, Howard refused to say the differences he has with his wife cause them to be "antagonistic," but said they were "unfriendly."

Judge Buck's action for naming a temporary guardian in place of Mrs. Howard was seen as the result of the testimony of the boy that he has an expensive car and a bank account of his own (his estate is worth $2,400,000), and the court's observation that boys of today "know more than their elders and think they own the world."

Howard's objection was based on the boy's freedom, saying that he desired that someone be placed over him who could watch his movements carefully and keep him from associates and places not for his good.

Mrs. Howard in France

Theodore Roche, San Francisco, and Louis Oneal, San Jose, appeared as "friends of the court" in the proceedings in Mrs. Howard's behalf, she having no counsel there to represent her.

Coroner and Public Administrator McGovern reports that he had more inquests last December than at any time during his term in office. He heard 34 cases, nine of which took place in San Mateo in one day. This is the largest number of inquests ever held in any one month in San Mateo county. He is a genial man who aims to make it as pleasant as possible for the unfortunate ones appearing in those sad investigations.

$100,000 BIRD COLLECTION DONATED WHITTIER ACADEMY

Yesterday Judge Buck made an order at the request of the executors of the Joseph V. De Laveaga estate to deliver the vast collection of wild ducks and geese belonging to the estate to the Whittier Ornithological Academy at Whittier.

The collection consists of 1000 ducks and geese, 81 varieties of wild ducks and 21 of geese, costing $100,000 and taking several years to gather from all parts of the world.

It was De Laveaga's hobby during his life to collect these varieties and care for them at his bird sanctuary at his palatial home at San Mateo. He delighted to walk among the birds and admire them. He wanted to have them cared for after his death. The fowl will be well taken care of at the academy which has prepared a sanctuary of 26 acres for the birds. It is the policy of the well known institution to preserve the wild life of California and the West.

Wells Fargo Bank and Union Trust Company are the executors of the big estate valued at more than $5,000,000. In court yesterday the executors were represented by Judge G. Elmer Jennings of Atherton. There was no opposition to the request.

REALTY OFFICE IS ROBBED; RECORDS BURN IN MYSTERY

Fire at 8:30 a. m. Tuesday destroyed valuable records in the Ratterree Bros. Company real estate office at 400 Walbridge street, Visitacion Valley, in what was believed a plot against the firm.

Undersheriff Lawrence Nieri and Deputy Sheriff John Simpkin investigated the mystery fire.

They were notified that an adding machine and a typewriter were stolen from the office. The office records were thrown upon the floor in a large pile and a cigaret was either accidentally dropped into the papers, or the office was deliberately fired, Nieri and Simpkin reported. The records were partially destroyed, but the fire was discovered in time to save the office from damage.

The intruder entered the office by prying open a front door panel with a screw driver and then releasing the lock.

The suit is brought on his behalf by H. B. Guldborg. Young Guldborg was riding as a guest in the car of Robert Dixon, which collided with one driven by Josephine Civilli. He suffered a crushed lung and other injuries.

Frank Lee Crist and Lorenzo Costello of Palo Alto are counsel for the plaintiff.

Tan Cement Is Produced Here In New Method

And now you can have tan sidewalks and buildings if you prefer!

Tan colored cement has been produced in the laboratories of the Pacific Portland Cement Company in Redwood City, Robert B. Henderson, president of the firm, announced.

It is hailed as the first real improvement in the basic color of Portland cement since its discovery over 108 years ago.

Henderson announced that the tan colored cement was produced because of a public desire for a color brighter than the ordinary gray which has been the natural color of the product.

The tan color results from a special burning process and not through any chemical alteration, Henderson said. Before this, it was possible to produce colored cement only by use of pigments.

Court Pays Tribute To Probate Officer

Judge Franklin Swart last week in the superior court paid a glowing tribute to the efficiency of San Mateo county's probation officer, Francis Robinson.

The occasion was when the court referred the Martin case to the probation officer. No objection was heard but the court took the opportunity of praising his officer whom he declared was the most efficient probation officer the county ever had. He was safe and sound, capable and thoroughly honest. The court expressed himself well pleased with the young official. Robinson was in court and blushed beautifully as he heard the kind words of approbation from the court.

COUNTY PLANNING ORDINANCE VOTED, PENSION STUDIED

The San Mateo County Planning Commission's ordinance dealing with new subdivisions and filing of maps was adopted by the board of supervisors Monday.

It was introduced on motion of Supervisor John Poole, Redwood City, and second of Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey, South San Francisco.

An ordinance creating ways and means of retiring peace officers of San Mateo county, including constables, police officers and deputy sheriffs, was submitted for consideration of the board of supervisors by H. W. Call and was taken under advisement.

It would call for each officer who wishes to participate to give up 2 per cent of his salary each month toward the fund. Retirements would be made after 20 years' service and on reaching the age of 55. Few would now be eligible for that retirement, Call said, and if they wished to participate, would be required to deposit 2 per cent of their salaries for the past 20 years.

On the advice of District Attorney Edmund Scott, the board today refused to call an election for formation of the Salada Beach-Brighton Public Utility District on the ground that the Salada Beach Utitlity District is now functioning in that area.

Walter Hoffman and Ray C. Francis, both of San Mateo, today made application for appointment to the San Mateo county traffic patrol.

There was a rumor current in Redwood City yesterday that the board of supervisors at its meeting on Monday next would grant a permit to the City and County of San Francisco to erect a jail building on the Sneath site in the hills back of San Bruno.

The petition for the permit was denied by the board some months ago, two of the supervisors voting for the permit.

It is said the supervisors of San Francisco will on Monday again apply for permission to build their bastile in the county. It is also asserted that the San Mateo county board has patched up its differences and will grant the much-coveted permit.

"Forward Step" Movement Begun In Church Here

The first of a series of "Forward Step" meetings to be conducted on the peninsula was held in the Methodist church recently at an evangelism dinner, when Mr. Charles Dean of Chicago, head of the movement which is centralized there, explained the method of house to house evangelism. Other speakers included Dr. Newton E. Moats, secretary of the San Mateo-San Francisco counties' church extension society, and Dr. H. H. Frost, superintendent of the San Francisco district.

Thirty-five visitors from the peninsula were among the 60 persons attending the meeting. Some of these were Dr. H. E. Milnes, Burlingame; the Rev. Vern C. Brown, San Mateo; the Rev. C. S. Harkins, San Bruno; the Rev. Mr. Dorsey, Mayfield, and the Rev. J. Throckmorton of Santa Clara.

Hi-Y Club Names New Officers

At its regular meeting Monday at the high school cafeteria the fifth period Hi-Y group elected officers to serve during this semester. Thomas Tibbs was elected to succeed Louis Treichel as president, Charles Bendeich was chosen as vice-president, Stanley Schaller secretary, and Kenneth Bennett treasurer.

Four young men out of this club are now giving of their time in leadership of younger boys' groups. Billy Dusel is with the Commanche Friendly Indians at Lincoln school; John Argo with the Pawnee Friendly Indians at Lincoln school; Kenneth Bomberg with the Iroquois Friendly Indians at McKinley school, and Phil Weed with the Apache Friendly Indians at Woodside.

SAFETY RULE

WASHINGTON. — The aeronautics branch of the United States Department of Commerce has issued a provision affecting the safety of retractible landing gears which have caused a few accidents since their appearance by sticking when the plane is ready to land. The rule provides that planes equipped with this gear must have an indicator to show the position of the wheels at all times.

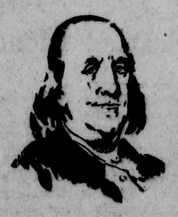
"Save and Have" Benjamin Franklin



National Thrift Week, January 18 to 23, honors the birthday of Benjamin Franklin, born January 17, 1706, a poor boy, whose rise to wealth and honor is a story that has inspired Americans for nearly two centuries.

Outstanding among his many contributions to human welfare was his preaching and practice of thrift. His advice, if followed today, will bring financial success just as it did 200 years ago.

Hoover Will Be Re-elected

President Herbert Hoover will be renominated and re-elected with as big a vote as he was in 1928. This is the prediction of many who have followed the trend of events in the past few months and watched the upward movement of business throughout the country.

Maine is back to normal, Michigan is opening its factories giving employment to untold thousands while many other states are feeling similar effects of business revival. Everywhere there is a trend upwards. A feeling is prevalent that we have passed the apex of the depression and that the dawn of prosperity is about to burst forth upon the nation.

Mr. Hoover, during all the financial trouble, has stood firmly at the helm doing all that was humanly possible, even foregoing his vacation in order that he might have a close touch on affairs. No man could have done more than he to stem the tide of disaster, to stop the onward rush of depression caused by the readjustment of financial difficulties brought on by the war.

It is fortunate, indeed, that the country has had Mr. Hoover in the White House during the crisis about the pass. Conditions might have been infinitely worse had we a less courageous president. He was the Moses who led the country out of the land of depression into the promised land of prosperity. His genius saved the United States from a financial panic from which it might not have recovered in years. While the country suffered, things could have been worse and greater suffering experienced.

California is proud of Hoover and his achievements, proud of his accomplishments at Washington and will support him in the coming campaign for re-election.

California is behind Mr. Hoover. The state will send a solid delegation to Chicago for him next June.

Hoover, the man of peace, the genius in statesmanship, will be kept at the White House.

Sacramento Endorses Shortridge

The Republican Committee of Sacramento County last week in a very strong set of resolutions endorsed the candidacy of Senator Samuel M. Shortridge for re-election for a third term.

This is the frist time in twenty years that the committee of that county has sponsored any candidate for that position, preferring to remain neutral in the state's selection of a senator. The Republicans of that section, this year, could not overlook the great efforts put forth by Senator Shortridge when the tariff schedules were being fixed two years ago. Every industry in Sacramento was protected by a substantial tariff. The fruit industry was taken care of by the senator. Wheat, barley and other farm products were given a good rate.

The tariff has helped in keeping out of the country the cheap commodities, in connection with California, so the farmers have done fairly well.

For that reason Shortridge will receive a big vote in Sacramento valley this year. He will secure the votes of the farmers throughout the state.

Shortridge, owing to his experience of twelve years at Washington, is able to do much for the state.

He is a member of the powerful finance committee, a ranking senator of the naval committee. If elected, most likely, he will be chairman of this important body.

There are a half dozen aspirants for Mr. Shortridge's place and in the scramble the junior senator is certain of election.

Keep Mr. Shortridge at Washington and Hoover in the White House and the country's interests will be safely guarded.

Weather Forecasting

For several years the University of California has maintained a department of oceanography at La Jolla, studying ocean currents and other phenomena which bear influence upon weather conditions along this coast. During that time many bulletins have been issued by the department. Within the last three or four years these bulletins have frequently carried the statement that an era of heavier rainfall was approaching; that the dry era would terminate possibly with the season of 1931-32, but almost certainly with the season of 1932-33. Then an era of heavier rainfall would begin and grow in intensity for a number of years, finally again growing dryer.

Last summer the bulletins from the department carried statements to the effect that this present season of 1931-32 would probably be the beginning of an era of heavier rainfall. We are pretty well convinced now that these predictions were quite well founded. So far this present season has been the wettest for a good many years, and there is every indication that it will continue to be wet.

UP AND DOWN THE STATE

CALIFORNIA WANTS IT

The picture "Washington Crossing the Delaware" has been taken from the walls of a New York museum and there is a story Governor Rolph has offered it place in this state. Critics have been assailing the canvas, maintaining that the general could not have stood erect in a boat which was battling the ice cakes — and wouldn't if he could. They point to the American flag displayed and say no such banner was then in existence and have other unkind things to say for the efforts of the artist.

Of course, what would suit the captious best would be an enlarged photograph of Washington crossing the river. The rest of us who know how unromantic and unsatisfying a photograph may be, are as well pleased there was no cameraman on board. A painting may carry the thought and tradition even when it makes heroes posture while a photograph reminds us sternly that figures in great events may have looked shabby and commonplace. Comparison of the results of the camera and the artist when treating the famous scene of the driving of the golden spike which linked this West with the East will bring eloquent testimony in favor of the wielder of the brush. It is probable Washington sat in the boat with his collar up and his nose blue with the cold but an honest picture of that indicates little of the heroism which is rightly associated with the act. — Oakland Tribune.

PLAYING BIG PART

The food distribution agencies of the country have established a record that will be stamped in mercantile history. They have passed to the consumer the benefit of price readjustments with such rapidity that no other generation knew.

In other periods of deflation the benefits were long in reaching the public. Those were the days of stocks bought by the seasons and the wholesaler and the retailer delayed as long as humanly possible the act of passing along to the consumer the benefits of lower costs.

But not in the present deflation. Food was the very first item to see lower prices. And the change was not marked by months of delay. It came immediately and as the deflation continued the new prices were marked up day by day.

Food retailing has undergone perhaps the most marked change of the entire business world in the last decade. Gone are the old dingy grocery stores. Present are the up-to-date markets, clean and orderly with a turn-over so rapid that the figures would make the old-time grocer dizzy. Both independents and chains have subscribed to the new thought in the handling of food. They have marched steadily ahead, passing on to the consumer every drop in the price of commodities, not next week or next month but immediately.

The cost of living has decreased some places between 25 and 40 per cent — experts differ as to the exact figure. Since food is the largest item in the cost of living, it is not difficult to figure the part that the food distribution agencies are playing in the scheme of things.

The food retailers have a right to be proud of their accomplishment. Their contribution to human welfare has been of the utmost importance. The people have sensed the situation and they are grateful.—San Bernardino Sun.

OUR OWN HANDS ARE STAINED BY AGGRESSION

Secretary Stimson has issued another warning to Japan, this time invoking a provision of the so-called nine-power treaty of 1922 which guarantees the

"territorial and administrative integrity of China."

And Japan will pay just as much attention to Stimson as she did to the ultimatum of the League of Nations a few weeks ago that fighting in Manchuria must stop on a certain date.

Moreover, America does not come into the case with clean hands.

Are not American troops in Nicaragua?

Do not American soldiers practically dominate Santo Domingo and Haiti?

And are we not told such military occupation is demanded for the protection of American interests?

It would be a very good thing if Uncle Sam minded his own business—particularly when he is in so indefensible a position himself with regard to using the army and navy to safeguard the investments of our own particular clique of international bankers.—Sacramento Bee.

JUST A LITTLE UNUSUAL

Southern California is blushing. Eighteen inches of snow have fallen in the mountains bounding San Diego. It has snowed in the streets of downtown Los Angeles. The snowfall even reached the lower foothills of Santa Barbara. It has been—shall we say?—unusually cool.

The Florida papers will gloat over that. New York, basking in a sun as warm as in springtime, will laugh about it. The nation will marvel at a miracle of nature which has shuffled the cards and brought snow to the West and tropical weather to the usually cold and blizzard-bound East.

The incident proves nothing of definite value, other than that the exception always proves the rule. The West has not suffered. The change in atmosphere has been invigorating. It has made children happy and thousands of them have seen snow for the first time. Chicago, for instance, is chuckling. Let it chuckle. Chicago hasn't paid its school teachers a passable check in months. Those in Santa Barbara and Southern California are paid regularly. Florida puts out extras. Let it gloat. Florida is seeing hundreds of acres of subdivisions turned in for taxes. California is maintaining its values and setting a national record in building construction and realty development. New York laughs and frolics in the sun. Let it laugh. Judges vanish there overnight. Judges in California remain here and keep reasonably honest because of their devotion to a tranquil and enjoyable climate. Even when it snowed in Los Angeles not a single public official disappeared!

The snow has melted in the hills and adding water to our trout streams and revivifying our underground water supply. Rain in the lowands and valleys has insured a great year for agriculture. Santa Barbara and Lompoc will stage the finest flower shows of their careers.

Nature is making it momentarily difficult for the secretaries of our chambers of commerce, but that is their hard luck. Santa Barbara is happy. The county is hopeful and the state is preparing to reap the fruits of the greatest tourist season in history.

The weather has been just a little unusual. That is all. — Santa Barbara News.

ON TRAIL OF COLUMBUS

According to the story he brought back, when Columbus stepped on the soil of a New World he was met by "naked, painted Indians with fine, high foreheads." After all these years the Smithsonian Institution wishes to know who were these Indians.

Leaving this week for the seldom visited San Salvador and Cat Islands in the Bahamas, is Herbert W. Kreiger, curator of ethnology of the institution and an expert on West Indian archaeology. He believes that it may even be possible to find some archaeological clue which will locate the actual landing place of the great navigator.

Columbus was given a friendly greeting by the Indians, following their first shock. He took several of them with him as interpreters when he sailed away and, lured by their stories of gold to the southward, skirted the northern coast of Cuba westward until he reached a point where his new friends no longer understood the language of the people. The implication, Krieger says, is that these Indians were Arawaks or members of the general Arawak stock. The Cuban coast peoples whose tongue they evidently understood are known to have been Arawaks. On the other hand, according to Krieger, it is entirely possible that they were an unrelated people, possibly closely connected with the Florida Indians, and that Arawak was a sort of trading language understood all over this part of the West Indies.

The island where Columbus landed apparently was quite thickly populated. It is possible that some remains of the culture, by which the people can be identified, still can be located. There is some uncertainty as to which island was the actual scene of Columbus' landing. The present island of San Salvador—Watling Island on English maps—appears to have the best claim to this honor but the landing may have taken place on the larger Cat Island, a few miles to the northwest. This was called San Salvador on old maps. In order to have landed here Columbus must have sailed within sight of Watling Island. Krieger will visit both places. Because Columbus remained only a short time at his first landing place it is very improbable that anything can be found which will make it possible to settle the question. Last winter the Smithsonian ethnologist was able to identify partially the place on the northern coast of Haiti where one of the discoverer's ships was wrecked.—Oakland Tribune.

MYSTERY TO HER

LONDON — Grace Katherine Bruce, 80, is wondering what it is all about. It has been reported that Lance-Corporal H. W. But Miss Bruce is very much alive, and she's now wondering who thinks she's a dead one.

JUST A STORY

TACOMA, Wash.—C. W. Pagett had been in an automobile wreck, and was charged with drunken driving. He told the court that he had not had a drink for 24 hours when he had the accident. He said, however, that after he had crashed he went to a farmhouse across the road and filled up on hard cider. His story was too fanciful, however, and he was fined $50.

Sport of Hunting Wildfowl Is Past Unless Sanctuaries Are Provided Soon for Birds

When I intimated in the last article I wrote on this subject published in the Times-Gazette under date of the 8th inst, that it would have been far better for all concerned had the President by his proclamation closed the season for hunting wild water fowl just for the year that has just passed, I fully expected to be and was criticized by a great number of those who take pleasure in hunting wild ducks, but I am now more fully convinced that my idea was correct and am firmly convinced that the younger generation who have duffed me as a "Hooverite" will, upon mature reflection, admit that my views were given for their best interests.

That the successive dry years previous to the present winter took a larger toll in the lives of the webfoots, there can be not a shadow of a doubt. You can, if you so desire, raise successfully in your back yards at home tame ducks in large numbers wth practically little or no water for them to swim in, provided you can save the little ducklings shortly after they are hatched from their greatest enemy, the ordinary house cat, but with the birds in the wild state it is quite a different matter.

Water is the only protection the young birds have. They are reared in the wide open spaces near some lake, river or pond and immediately upon being hatched are led by the mother bird to their only protection. If you think for a single moment you can catch a duckling two days old when it reaches water sufficiently deep for living, just try it once. I am of course referring to the wild birds. I have tried it myself without success, the young sprig or mallard making a clear dive of twelve to sixteen feet, coming up, giving me the ha-ha, and submerging again. But when the nesting place is far from water the young birds soon become prey for coons, skunks, hawks, and other predatory birds and animals.

Now during the open season for shooting just closed it is safe to say that hundreds of thousands of wild ducks were killed throughout theUnited States in one month. Add tothis the thousands that were wounded and never retrieved by that pest of the marshlands, the long range shooter, who by reason of the despicable selfishness born within him bangs away with his pump or automatic at birds clearly out of range and by scratch shots drops a bird now and then and, too lazy to go after it, leaves a beautiful specimen to perish miserably.

We all know that there are a great many persons who should never be permitted to drive an automobile. The mounting number of terrible accidents is the best evidence for such a conclusion. In my humble opinion there are a great number of men who should not be permitted to carry a shot gun, particularly in the hunting of wild water fowl. I refer to the heartless long range shooter.

Now there is fast approaching one of the finest breeding seasons for wild ducks all over the country that we have had for some years. The abundance of rain has filled to overflowing all lakes, reservoirs, creeks and ponds and the little ducklings when hatched are going to have full protection and be in the height of their glory. To be fair cut in full the number of birds killed during the one month open season and allow an average of eight eggs to each female bird. Can you figure the result for the next season. I cannot. I only wish I could.

A gentleman who is an undisputed authority on the wild birds of the marshland wrote recently an article in which he stated that "a dead female duck lays no eggs." You will not find much poetry in that remark, but it will require no keen vision to find a lot of good, wholesome truth.

Now my young wild duck hunters of today, will you agree with me that had the President saw fit to close the 1931 season entirely it would have been for the best interests of us all. I think you will.

WEDDING BELLS!

But Harry was not at his hotel or at his club. It was almost midnight before Dr. Mac found him—in the custody of the police.

"He assaulted the Count de Bellefonte," said a gendarme. "Met him on the street and punched his head, and now he won't say why he did it, and the Count won't press the case against him. We were about to release him, sir."

So, for the second time that evening, Harry went to see Constance, and this time her father was waiting to receive him.

"If anyone had told me," said James Kerr to his wife, an hour later, "that I would be hoping young Edmonds would come and tell me that he wanted to marry Constance, I'd have laughed in his face. And yet that's what I was doing. Well, I hope everything's explained and straight, at last. This has been a horrible day."

"I hope Constance knows her own mind," said his wife. "She seems terribly in love with him. I never saw anyone more miserable than she was before he came, or happier than she was when he finally did get here."

"They'll be all right," said Aunt Sophia decisively. "He has a temper that matches her own, and, if I know anything about Constance, she knows when she's met her match."

"Well, now that it's all over, I wish he'd go home," said Constance's father. "I want to go to bed."

He tiptoed to the door of his wife's sitting-room and shamelessly listened at the crack. "He's blaming himself for everything that happened," he reported, "and she's saying that it was all her fault."

"Better go in before they begin quarreling all over again, with each one wanting to shoulder the blame for their troubles," said Aunt Sophia practically.

"I'll send the doctor in," said Mr. Kerr. "Young Edmonds seems to jump when he speaks."

Constance and Harry stood on the little balcony outside the sitting-room, arm in arm. "And to think," he was saying, "that you tried for days to find me in London, and that you were ill and alone there."

"And to think that you were in Paris, hoping to see me, while I was writing you and telephoning your club and even waiting about at the door, on the chance of seeing you."

Dr. Mac appeared in the doorway. "My patient has had an exciting day," he said, in his best professional manner, "and I think her visitor should go home."

"Oh, very well," said Harry amiably. "Now that I don't have to look upon you as a rival, Baxter, I'll do anything you say. But, before I go, where's Sheila? I want to thank her for all she's done for Constance and me. I'm afraid she's seen me in a most unfavorable light."

Sheila laughed. "I saw you as a man who was terribly in love," she said. "And I really can't blame you now for any of the anxiety you caused me."

"In fact, Constance," interposed Dr. Mac, "his conduct was really a tribute to your charms."

"You are far too politic to remain a bachelor, Dr. Baxter interposed Aunt Sophia.

"That has been my feeling for a long time," he answered. "And Sheila and I are going to be married as soon as possible, now that her masquerade is over."

"Oh, wait a little while and let's have a double wedding!" cried Constance. "We don't need to be afraid of the old superstition that one of the couples in a double wedding has all the hard luck, because we've all had our share beforehand—all of us."

$5000 JUDGMENT FOR AUTO VICTIM

Judgment for $5000 was awarded by a superior court jury in Redwood City Friday in favor of Gertrude J. Juckert against Tony Tenent, San Mateo taxi operator, as the result of personal injuries incurred by her in an automobile accident in San Mateo, April 14, 1931.

She suffered an impairment of the hearing of her left ear, she told the jury.

NEW ZONING FIGHT SEEN, BURLINGAME

BURLINGAME, Jan. 19.—A new zoning fight loomed for Burlingame with the filing Monday of a protest with the city council against the plan to open a section of the Bayshore highway for apartment house buildings.

Forty-three apartment house owners informed the city council that too much land is already zoned for that purpose and objected to Bayshore highway apartments on the old Carolan estate.

CHAPTER 1

Moo -Madness

I sat ,one night, upon an iron bench and studied the Cabildo—to me the most imposing building in that historic city which lies, crescent-like, within the curving sweep of the Mississippi. Musing, I watched the scroll of history unroll before me. I saw De Vienville and those hardy followers of his who had erected the first house of the Crescent city; I saw the Spaniards pass—moving to the west and south—the Frenchman come and go, and the Spaniard come again; and I heard the thunderous shouts from a thousand throats as Claiborne unfurled from the iron balcony of the old Cabildo the Stars and Stripes, emblem of the new republic.

"Ah, well," I said, half to myself, half to the vanishing shades of history, "the varying fortunes of Louisiana belong to the past; she is safe now within the fold. No more will she be ruled by kings and queens, courtiers and courtesans."

Whereupon a sound broke into my reverie—the lilt of a woman's laugh, as clear as the note of a mocking bird.

"But, your majesty," said the voice in Spanish, "if we walk two more squares along this way we shall have passed the levee and cast ourselves into the river."

"Name of G—d!" I gasped, leaping to my feet. There was something in that musical voice that touched a vibrant cord in my soul, the young blood flamed through my veins. As I stood, trembling in this new emotion, three figures left the shadows of the Cabildo and, moving southward, crossed Chartres street, turned to the left and approached the point where I stood, three figures who might have stepped from a Titan canvas. One was a slim graceful courtier with a scabbard that flashed in the moonlight with every movement of his left knee; the other two were a king and a queen of old Spain, bearing, each of them, all the trappings of royalty.

Speechless, I stared, wondering vaguely if, by some grotesque twist of fate, this consciousness of mine had been thrown back three centuries; yet, yonder stood the Cabildo, this was New Orleans, and the time—I felt certain—was the year of our Lord eighteen hundred twenty-one. But had she not said, "Your majesty," and did they not look like soverigns of ancient Spain? Unheeding, I drank deep of the beauty of this modern Isabella.

She had all the regal dignity and poise of Spain's great queen; Titan himself might have arranged the wavy blue-black hair. Her eyes in the moonlight seemed to hold purple shadows, her face was pale, her l'ps half parted; a fragile hand, inquiring and partly closed, pressed against the curve of cheek and chin.

His majestiy, a sturdy man with heavy shoulders, square full beard and broad forehead, spoke deep in his massive chest; but, deaf and dumb and blind to all the world save the woman who stood before me, I paid no heed.

Except for the lovely, gracious lady who is my mother, woman had hardly touched my life; yet here was I, lost in the depths of a lady's eyes, a lady I had never seen until this night. Madness? Aye, a sudden and overwhelming madness, and no more to be explained than the alchemy of love itself.

As I stood, dazed, faltering, his majesty's voice, which held a rasping hostile note, beat into my consciousness: "Have the amber wines of old Didier touched thy brain, dolt, or is stupidity the natural heritage of Yankees?"

"It may be that he cannot hear," the lady said kindly, "—cannot understand." Then in swift French to me: "Is it that you do not know the Spanish, Monsieur, cannot hear the voice?"

I tried to smile—a sorry effort, for the past, as well as the spell of her beauty, still bore upon me. "We of New Orleans must know three languages, your magesty," I faltered; "and a voice that is like music—"

"Carraca!" The magic of the night and the misty varoprings of my wine-mused mind gave way to grim realities of the moment, for the broad-shouldered man who chose to ape a king advanced upon me threateningly. He tried to brush me aside with the sweep of a muscular arm, but I swung a hard, and, I think, efficient fist; for a year of campaigning in that taterdemalion army under General Jackson had given me many things, not the least of which was the healthy American knack of rough-and-tumble fighting. Under a blow that found his whiskered jaw his majestiy went to his hands and knees, then he came swiftly to his feet, right hand seeking his hip, and the slim blade of a small sword gleamed in the moonlight.

"Not so hasty, Adolfo," said the graceful courtier, whose face, I noticed, possessed so much of the high beauty of the lady that I knew him for her brother; "you must—"

"A dog," Adolfo gasped. "Why should I not run him through? Did he not accost us; did he not stare at Carisima; did not the stupid clod lay violent hands upon a Fuentes?"

"But, Adolfo mio," said her majesty, "he is unarmed."

Ah, sweet angel! I was unarmed—she had noticed it. I bent a worshiping head. "Your majesty is too kind; I was but a lonely being, who, dreaming or a bench in the moonlight, heard a voice coming out of the night, and a vision—"

"Loco!" cried Adolfo, emphasizing the charge of madness against me with a whistling sweep of his sword. "Give him thy blade, Polito; must I waste the evening on a stupid ladrone?"

Polito, reading my face, found acquiescence there. He drew his sword, grasped the point with thumb and forefinger and, resting the gleaming steel across his left forearm, extended the hilt to me. I caught it in eager fingers, for she had called him "mio"; and that proprietary "Carisima" of his had kindled a fire of senseless jealousy within me. Polito's weapon balanced like a feather in my hand; a Toledo blade, in truth. I swung it in a tentative arc, and the air sang beneath that blow.

His majesty shrugged out of the long cape and, point raised, advanced upon me. "Guard," said he.

I think the hissing cadence of my sword touched a cord of cowardice in his majesty! I think he must have realized that it was not a stupid clod who stood before him, and I'm sure such realization added nothing to his confidence.

"Not so fast, Senor," I cried; "do you know that the road to hell is traveled in haste, while heaven is reached more slowly?" He swore in his beard and I continued: "If I should hazard a guess as to your masquerade I would say that you are Charles the Fifth of Spain, a noble king who lived three hundred years ago; but your actions and your words belie your regal trappings."

"Guard, Senor!" he gasped.

Now a devil of impudence perched upon my tongue: "And your lady will be the gracious Eleanor, yet lovelier by far than the consort of your ancient namesake; aye, infinitely more beautiful than Spain's great queen herself, the splendid Isabella, whose charm has furnished through the centuries the motif for song and story."

"He is mad," she breached, "mad!"

"Must I run you through, dolt?" Adolfo cried.

My moon-madness disappeared, my brain cleared, confidence was mine. And, as I laughed aloud from the sheer joy of the thing, our blades came together with a rasping whisper.

I felt of his wrist, and found an iron rigidity there; I tried a tentative tierce, and met a swift, efficient parry. No mean adversary, this powerful Spaniard in his regal raiment. We swept back and forth, our blades whipping the air in whining arcs, or hissing together in venomous slitherings, our labored breathi g coming and going through set teeth, our feet tapping and sliding along the pavement, every muscle of our bodies tensed, every nerve alert, every glance searching—searching for an opening, and every fleeting thought building plans of attack and parry. As we contended thus a circle of curious gathered—gathered silently from nowhere. They spoke in awed whispers, as though the spell of this night of madness lay upon them also.

Polito came within my view as we circled and parried and offered riposte and swift counter-riposte. I smiled at him, for Polito had too much of the beauty and grace of her majestiy to gain any enmity from me. I was happy to find a friendly light in his eyes. Now I caught a glimpse of the lady, upon whose equisite face lay the pallor of fear. A fear, no doubt, for the sturdy Spaniard who had called her Carisima . . . and she had called him mio. And here was I, mad with and inexplicable and overwhelming love, a love that was—because of its utter hopelessness—nothing short of sheer insanity.

Whereupon I laughed wildly, and charging with reckless abandon, beat my adversary down with a furious attack that carried me near to victory.

"Nearly," he answered, and his deep voice came almost in a gasping sob, "is never quite enough."

Now, when I heard the labored effort of his voice I knew that I had won. With the realization that I was his master my youthful pride offered a jibe or two: "Cannot a lonely being dream in the moonlight, Your Majesty, and conjure up the figures of the past, or look with favor upon a lady without the charge of madness being placed against him?"

With a frenzied burst of charges he built up a gleaming wall of steel in front of me. I moved back before that last attack, listening with fine satisfaction to the labored breath that whistled through his teeth, for he had nearly reached the end—and knew it. And when I felt a weakening of that iron wrist of his, and noted the diminishing power of his lunges, and saw the look of animal terror that leaped into his eyes, a deep disgust for the man entered my soul. I would let her see the terror in his eyes, I would have her know the craven that he was, and if she chose to love him then. . . .

I advanced in attack now with all the reserve force that I possessed. Parrying wildly, he retreated before this final offensive. I think the fear of imminent death had touched his brain, for when I thrust, and felt the steel take hold, I heard hi offer up a sigh almost of contentment.

His sword, falling from nerveless fingers, clattered upon the cobbles; with a soft cry of "Carisima" he wen to his knees, and then like a man who is very tired he crumpled slowly to the pavement. A passion of resentment, of disgust, still burned within me. "Charles the Fifth indeed," I said, casting my sword to the ground beside him; "bah—you should be called Charles the Last!"

I turned away as her majesty dropped to her knees beside the fallen man. "Ah, 'Dolfo mio," she cried, "Adolfo!"

"Carisima," he said again.

Polito laid a hand upon my arm. "We would apologize, Senor."

"To me," I gasped; "you and—and—?"

"Yes, Senor—my sister, the Senorita Lamartina. We have just lately come from a bal masque, where Adolfo has doubtless looked too often upon the bottom of an emptied wine glass. May I hope that you will let me offer our apologies?"

I laughed aloud in a sudden and unexplainable excess of happiness. Then she wasn't his wife? "The Senor and his sister will find me ever at their service," I said. "One never knows—a time may come—"

"You are kind, Senor, as well as a gentleman of high courage."

The gathering circle had closed in to attend the wounded man, who—so I judged from the volume of his groans—had not received a mortal thrust. "Who is his majesty, Senor?" I asked.

"Adolfo de Fuentes, colonel in the Spanish army under La Torre, who is governor of Venezuela."

"Then you go," I asked, "to Venezuela?"

Before he could answer my question a huge mulatto at my elbow voiced a warning bellow: "De Charlies—heah dey come!" And a narrow - shouldered, pasty - faced wharf rat amplified it with a shrill: "Les gens d'armes!"

"If they should capture you, Senor?" Polito said.

"Yet I have only offered a man's defense."

"True, but the least, Senor, will be an awkward and infinite proces-verbal, time and trials and an unfortunate wait, while the Senorita—"

I found his hand and gave it a warm clasp. "You will convey my regrets to the Senorita?"

"Assuredly, Senior."

"Then—adios."

"Adios, moonth-wrath," he whispered, and I turned around and broke through the curious crowd.

Two of the "Charlies" barred my path. One received a stiff-armed jab in the chest that tumbled him over and over like a performing parrakeet, the other bent his body skilfully to evade a swinging fist, then he fired point-blank at my face and missed, which was nothing unsual at all, for the gens d'armes often miss.

Now I put my feet to the pavement and gave myself over to the business of silent running while the chase roared behind me. I directed my steps eastward, went north and east again into Rue Royal, and on and on, ever deeper into the French quarter. I passed vine-blanketed walls which, I knew, concealed quaint mansions and beautiful courtyards. As I ran I kept an eye searching for an adventitious entrance that might lead to one of these bowers of beauty, for the street itself offered no refuge.

I found, finally, a grilled gate, which, opening to my touch, led under a graceful stone arch so low I had to bend my head to enter. I waited in the gloom of the areaway as sounds of the battle went by.

Silent, I crouched in the shadows long after the noises of the futile chase had died away, and waiting, I had a chance to view again the amazing events of this mad night. In fancy I heard again the music of the woman's laugh, and I saw the slim hands that pressed upon her bosom; that despairing cry of "'Dolfo mio" beat into my consciousness, and a fit of foolish trembling took possession of me.

I started for the oval of light that showed me the way to the street, but stopped when figures, turning in from the paved walk, blocked the passage. I heard the rasping scratch of a key in the lock of the iron gate and retreated warily, seeking the friendly shades as four men advanced upon me along the gloomy passage.

I came, anon, to a tiny courtyard, in the middle of which a table stood, bearing glasses, silver and a decanter or two. Over the table swung a huge brass lamp, yet the light it furnished was hardly brighter than that of the brilliant moon. I knew, of course, that the house would afford me no safety, so I flattened my tall body in a narrow, protecting apse in the brick wall that made up two sides of the courtyard. Standing straight and motionless in grotesque mimicry of some saint who had doubtless occupied this space in time long past, I held my breath as the four figures went by. One was a swarthy, heavy-bodied brute who seemed to have the look of the sea about him; another had the square shoulders and the alert manner of a soldier; while the third was evidently a merchant and a man of means, for his manner and the sleek smoothness of his well-nourished figure held the complacency of mental and physical ease.

The fourth man gained, and continued to hold my closest attentino. There was latent power in the poise of his lithe body, a look of the eagle in his eye, a rich resonance in the commanding tones of his voice.

The suave host filled four glasses with an amber fluid and, proffering one to each of his guests with a light laugh, said: "This garden is ours, Senores, where flowers of intrigue may bloom in safety. Therefore, Francisco mio—" He bowed to him of the commanding poise.

Whereupon Francisco raised his glass. "To Simon Bolivar," he said, his deep vibrant voice intoning a sort of benediction, "the Liberator of our people!"

They drank slowly, standing, and after a reverent silence, murmured, "Viva, viva," and again, "Viva!"

Simon Bolivar? I had heard of him; who hadn't? Already they were calling him the George Washington of South America; this amazing soldier, statesman and patriot who, when only a youth, had plumbed the depths of despair in the loss of a young and beautiful bride, and had devoted his life thereafter to the service of his mother country, Venezuela. I gasped, and held my breath again for fear they would discover me. Nothing but the gloom of the apse hid me; had I stepped forward one yard I should have come within the glowing circle of the lamp and the silver light of the moon that filtered through the foliage.

So I continued the imitation of a saint while the men finished three bottles of Latour's best. It loosened their tongues so that the purpose of this midnight meeting stood releaved to me. I was aghast for, although this new republic of the United States might have a very tender feeling and a definite sympathy for the struggling South American colonies, I knew it would not countenance a revolutionary junta within its boundaries.

"It was all too easy, Senores." Diego, the complacent merchant, was speaking. "Within the long, carefully twisted coils of tobacco are guns; ground tobacco in the kegs that we have loaded on the ship will burn with greater readiness than tobacco ever burned before—it will explode!" He laughed aloud. "One barrel of flour will hold two score of pistols, and even the innocent Indian corn has taken for traveling companions knives and bullets; while each huge slab of salt pork carries within its greasy interior a half dozen machetes. Unloaded at La Guaira this interesting shipment will move, unconsidered, through the Spanish lines, and the natives who wait for Simon Bolivar will be in readiness."

"A beautiful plan," said Francisco.

"We will drink upon it," the swarthy sailor suggested.

As I watched them drink, a chill of fear touched my spine, and my tongue had an unfamiliar feel in my mouth. Looking upon the man whom nature had set apart to be a leader, I felt the thrust of his cold eyes over the edge of his wine glass. "How long since, my dear Diego," he asked then, "have you put another saint in the place reserved so long for San Isidro?"

He had found me; those sharp eyes of his had sought me out! Should I run, and if so, where? There was only the house, and the garden surrounded by a wall too high for unassisted scaling. Should I offer resistance to these four men, three of whom were doubtless armed, or should I surrender peaceably? It seemed certain that the knowledge I had acquired concerning their intent would be my death warrant; they could not let me go and then continue further with their plan of revolution.

While I considered thus Diego answered: "I have put no saint in the place reserved for San Isidro; you jest, amigo."

"Sinner or saint, Diego mio," Francisco insisted, "there is a figure in the apse. The figure is taller by a shoulder than San Isidro, and he is garbed as the modern dandy of New Orleans. His hair, too, is not the dark hair of the Mexican patron, but light." He laughed shortly, and came to his feet. "He is an American saint, Diego, which is strange, for I had always believed that the pagan Americano had no saints."

He must have had the eyes of a lynx, and in his voice lay murder. As the swarthy sailor came toward my hiding place the soldier drew a gleaming pistol.

"Not here—not in here!" Diego cried. "You cannot kill a man in my garden. Take him—take him alive, and move him to the river. Drown him, but do not shoot him in my garden!"

Senor Sailor, his bloodshot eyes staring stupidly, thrust his dark face within range of my fist, and I swung swiftly. It caught him fair upon the point of a heavy chin. Tumbling backward. he fell with sharp violence against the table, which overturned with a resounding crash of glass, catching the soldier in its fall, precipitating him to his hands and knees.

The fighting blood of my sturdy Norse father raced through my veins, filling me with the lust for battle. I shot out of my retreat and, striking wildly, found the soft face of Diego, into which my fist sank sufficiently. He went down heavily to the pavement of the courtyard. Madness seized me again, and I laughed aloud.

EMERGENCY 'PHONE SERVICE FOR CRASH VICTIMS REQUESTED

The State Highway Patrol at Sacramento has been asked to what extent it would co-operate toward establishing telephone emergency boxes along the peninsula highways for use in calling medical and ambulance aid for automobile mishap victims.

Dr. J. C. Geiger, San Francisco health officer, made the inquiry in a telegram sent to Capt. E. R. Cato, superintendent of the state patrol.

"The emergency service was recommended at the safety conference held in December when ambulance service for the peninsula was agreed upon but nothing has been done about the telephones," Dr. Geiger said.

EAGLES TAKE FEATURE TILT OFF SOLDIERS

By EL THOMAS

Johnny Weir, who saved the game on several occasions with brilliant shots, and Tom Shine, who finally sewed it up, helped the Redwood City Eagles' basketball team defeat the West Coast Army champions of the 30th Infantry by a score of 34 to 29 in a spectacular contest in the Sequoia high school gymnasium Wednesday. The Redwood City Native Sons defeated the Associated Indemnity quintet of San Francisco 32 to 20 in the preliminary.

With their victory over the army cagers tucked away, the Eagles open their Peninsula Basketball League schedule tonight against the Mountain View Native Sons at Mountain View, starting at 8 o'clock. Other P. B. L. games tonight are Mountain View Knights vs. Spalding Ramblers at Burlingame and South San Francisco vs. Minshall Sport Shop at San Jose.

Wednesday, the Eagles were off to a slow start and trailed throughout the first half. They closed in to within one point of the visitors, 13 to 12, at the half.

Capt. Gene Jordan opened the second period with a field goal to take the lead. Then the infantrymen cut loose with the flashy Corporal Gilbert operating under the basket with some accurate shooting and Lieut. Johnny Malloy, captain and running guard, engineering a steady march that nearly sunk the Eagles. Malloy was deadly on free throws and had plenty of chances.

Gilbert Is Army Star

Ed Cullen replaced Lutje at forward and scored a one-handed shot. Weir dropped a long one, and Shine potted another to bring his team up within one point again. A goal by Jordan gave the Eagles a lead, but Gilbert sneaked away again on a fast break for an army goal.

Weir stepped into the picture brilliantly, matching the army cagers point for point on long shots and finally gave the Eagels a two-point margin with an arch-shot from mid-court that scraped the high rafters. Shine sunk a "sleeper" in the hole to finish things, 34 to 29.

Eagle Floor Game Slow

The Eagles' floor game was a bit slow and their offensive rebound work was listless, but their shooting in the second half was smooth enough. In addition to his defense work, Shine went in on offense, with Weir handling the key position outside.

The Associated Indemnity hoopsters gave the Native Sons a scare during the first half and cut the lead to 14 to 13 at the half. The Natives outscored the visitors, 18 to 7, in the second half through the basket work of Jimmy McKay, Capt. Curt Rayer and Al Hallet.

Game Conservation Problems Outlined at Sportsmen's Show

Problems of game conservation were outlined to more than 1000 local sportsmen and their friends at a motion picture program held in the Sequoia high school auditorium Tuesday under the auspices of the Redwood City Sportsmen's Club.

In his lecture on game mammals illustrated by films of herbivorous and carnivorous wild game species of California, R. S. Ellsworth of the Fish and Game Commission told of the relationship between the two types.

"Approximately 45,000 deer are killed by the 500 mountain lions in the state annually. The state pays a bounty on mountain lions in order to decrease their numbers, but even so it would not solve our problem to eliminate them. Lions kill off the sick and diseased deer and help prevent the spread of disease among the healthy deer that are able to take care of themselves," Ellsworth said.

"Our problem," he continued, "is to foster a conservation program extending over 50 or 100 years or more to assure for the generations to come the privileges of having wild game in California. Our black-tail deer of the San Joaquin valley have been forced out of their natural environment and into the mountains, where their winter food supply is low and where disease attacks them more readily."

Steelhead fishing at Point Reyes and angling in the water reservoirs of San Diego county were among the fishing scenes shown.

Harold O. Preston, executive secretary of the Associated Sportsmen of California, spoke briefly on the activities of his organization.

Bert L. Werder, official of the local club, told of the Redwood City sportsmen's activities, in the absence of Judge Franklin Swart. The speakers were introduced by George E. Zehender, president of the sportsmen's club.

The program concluded with two reels of pictures of San Mateo county, with a descriptive talk by Roscoe J. Wyatt, secretary of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce.

Two selections were presented by the Sequoia Union High School orchestra, under the direction of Max L. Gelber. William J. Graef was chairman of the committee arranging the program.

SCOUT NEWS
BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The local Sea Scouts are ex-scouts who have advanced to high rank and have become 15 years or more of age and wish to continue the many friendships and interests enjoyed during Boy Scout days. There are 30 young men in the Sea Scouts. The activities consist of swimming, life saving, rowing, sculling, and handling sailing and motor boats as well as much indoor work such as navigation, chart work, etc.

There are 12 sailing and rowing boats in the Sea Scout fleet, all of which have been built by the boys. Several cruises and races have been held the past year. The Kiwanis club sponsors the group A. S. Liguori, George Erskine Judge Edward McAuliffe and Herman Phillips father the "ship." The Redwood City Sportsmen's Club also backs the young tars and is planning to help them make a success the coming season. The members average five years of scouting and all have reached high ranks.

Troop 143 was organized by John W. Rhoda February 8, 1926. Starting with six boys the troop soon grew to normal size and developed many traditions and customs. Wilbur Doxsee gave much able assistance during the early life of the troop, and later Bob Steffens, present scoutmaster, took an active part as assistant. The troop was originally sponsored by the Congregational church. During the last year the Native Sons of the Golden West have taken over the sponsorship.

The Gold Neckerchief is the special insignia. The troop has won several honors in the county and is always well represented at scout rallies and affairs. The distribution of Christmas baskets is one of the traditions. A spring hike up Mount Tamalpais is an annual custom. The tradition of the coming of Mr. Driggs, a mysterious character, is carried out as an annual affair.

There are 32 boys in the troop at present and all are enthusiastic about the scout work. Bert Werder has been of great assistance with his committee from the Native Sons.

Troop No. 3

The troop organized two months ago at the Methodist church is off to a big start. The Rev. Jesse Rudkin is backing the group with the committee composed of Donald Bogie, Fred A. Schmitz and Glenn Alexander.

Bill Ungells, the young scoutmaster, has 15 boys on the line every Tuesday evening and is giving them training in scout life and other activities. Mr. Ungells also conducted scout swimming classes successfully this summer. An average of 25 boys attended the 20 lessons.

The troop has adopted the blue necker. It is making rapid advancement and expects to produce a goodly number of second class scouts at the next Court of Honor.

The population of the United States in 1777 was 3,000,000.

SAVING MADE IN MEALS AT COUNTY JAIL

Parkman Bill Ends Flat Sum To Sheriff; Cuts Costs

Citizens interested in the Parkman governmental bill provisions requiring that the county purchasing agent buy the supplies and feed the prisoners at the county jailed, learned that a saving of $1620.80 was effected over the past three months.

Under the old system, the sheriff was allowed 25 cents per meal for each of the prisoners. The cost of this has been reduced to an average of 7 cents per meal per prisoner for the past three months, claims on file in the purchasing agent's office reveal.

In October, 2441 meals were served at an average of 8 3-5 cents, or a total cost of $210.65, and a saving of $400.60.

In November, 2834 meals were served at an average cost of 6½ cents, or a total cost of $184.66 and a saving of $523.84.

In December, 3820 meals were served at an average cost of six and 7/10ths cents, totaling $258.64, or a saving of $696.36.

REPRESENTATION OF R. C. ON PORT BODY IS HELD SUFFICIENT

It is not likely that additional representatives will be appointed at this time to represent the third township on the county harbor committee, it was stated at the Redwood City Chamber of Commerce.

Redwood City already has representation on the committee through its Citizens' Harbor Development Committee, the original group which has just been increased in size to give it a county-wide scope by the supervisors, who acted at the request of civic leaders from various parts of the county.

Carl Stoner is chairman of the citizens' committee, but the group may be reorganized, now that it has been made larger and more representative of county thought.

Four of the supervisors Monday named representatives, but Supervisor John Poole of the third district has not done so on account of the reason given above. The chamber of commerce, it is indicated, is satisfied with the arrangement.

The purpose of the harbor group is to study the proposed formation of a port district of county-wide area, or less, for the development of a deep water port at Redwood City.

Menlo Park

James Beardsley, the local printer and capitalist, is preparing to make a tour of the United States and Canada in an automobile converted into a traveling mansion with all the convenience of a palace. Mr. Beardsley for some time has been working on a new Chevrolet putting in sleeping apartments, kitchen, etc. and is ready to start on his long journey with his good wife. He will leave here in about two weeks, going south to Los Angeles. He may return to Menlo Park in the fall.

There arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bert P. Mehl on January 17, a daughter all the way from baby land and the event has caused the efficient and popular city engineer to wear a 8 by 9 smile that won't come off. Mrs. Mehl and the new comer are doing nicely.

Last Monday night Mrs. Robert E. Brown, district deputy grand president of the Native Daughters, visited Palo Alto Parlor to conduct a drill. Mrs. Brown lives in Menlo Park and is a member of the local parlor.

Fremont station established during the war in Stanford Park was discontinued during the week by order of the State Railroad Commission at the request of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., which maintained it there since the war. During the late conflict over a hundred thousand soldiers got off and on at this depot.

The Native Daughters will hold a food sale in the Murray block. The comely and charming daughters will dispense sweets to all. Their home made cakes and pies are sure to lure and satisfy the most fastidious. The salads, too, bring many patrons. The sale takes place tomorrow. Come and secure your Sunday supply.

Miss Emily McCarthy, the pretty daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. McCarthy of Menlo Park, has become a student in the San Francisco College for Women, 2040 Broadway. Miss McCarthy graduated from Notre Dame, Belmont last June.

Mrs. Devol, head of the finance committee of the unemployed organizations, at a recent meeting reported that she had received from all sources the sum of $582.35, expenditures $430.11, leaving $152.24 in her hands. The unemployed received the sum of $361, and $68 for food. The funds of the committee are becoming depleted and more money is needed. The organization is sponsoring a food sale to take place on Saturday, January 30, in the Murray building. Home make cakes, pies, salads and other delicious articles of food will be offered for sale. All should aid this worthy cause.

On Thursday evening, January 28, the Native Sons and Native Daughters will install their new officers jointly in the Masonic Temple. Numerous visiting members of the society from about the bay region will attend. Philip Blanchard, deputy grand president, is to install the officers. A banquet is to follow the ceremony.

No action was taken by the Menlo Park city council Tuesday night at a special meeting on suggested plans for the scraping and repair of unimproved streets in the section of town west of the highway. The matter was postponed for consideration at the regular council meeting next Tuesday night.

Miss Aileen Maloney, the charming young daughter of Prof. and Mrs. Harry W. Maloney of Stanford University, will depart next week to enter St. Joseph's Hospital in San Francisco, to become a nurse. The young lady will specialize in nursing children. Miss Maloney is a graduate of Sacred Heart Academy. She has a delightful personality and a genial and happy manner, which attributes will assist her in a successful career in her chosen profession.

Leonard Monroe, the painter and young son of W. E. Monroe, the realty broker, has employed D. E. Sullivan, the local attorney with offices in the Sutton building, to prosecute a claim against Huhes, the contractor. The case was to have come up for hearing in the superior court yesterday but was continued for a week. Mr. Sullivan is building up a lucrative practice in this locality.

BELLE MONTI TO GET NEW LIGHTS, PLANNERS DECIDE

BELMONT, Jan. 19.—Belle Monti subdivision will no longer be in darkness. At the meeting of the city planning commission held Monday at the school house auditorium, the commissioners went on record as approving the installation of 27 lights throughout the subdivision.

Mrs. Alice M. Marston, resident of Belle Monti, presented a petition to the city council a few weeks ago recommending that light standards be installed at Belle Monti. Mrs. Marston was present Monday and aided the the commission, as well as W. W. Hendricks, of the city engineer's office, in placing of the lights.

The new lights will be of the pole bracket type containing a 250-watt lamp.

The streets designated where the light brackets are to be installed are: Alameda de las Pulgas, 12 lights; Hillman, two lights; Ruth avenue, two lights; Notre Dame avenue, two lights; Covington avenue, one light; Terrace drive, one light; Valley View, two lights; Oak Knoll drive, two lights, and Miller, one light.

On motion of Commissioner Don Alford the planning commission accepted the plan as outlined by Mrs. Marston and Engineer Hendricks, and voted to recommend to the city council that immediate action be taken. Commissioner Horace Duckenfield seconded the action.

Provision was also made for red arrows to be installed on posts at several of the dangerous intersections throughout the subdivision.

The commission went on record, on motion of Alford, to recommend to the council that immediate action be taken to lay a permanent sidewalk on El Camino Real from the C. J. Messner's store to the postoffice. In front of the postoffice there is a mud hole, which is of great inconvenience to the residents of Belmont during the heavy rains.

The commission also discussed the feasibility of having the houses in the old section of Belmont numbered for the convenience of delivery trucks and strangers coming to the community. No action was taken.

The amazing wonders of science were described in a talk given to the Exchange Club Tuesday by H. M. Hassell of San Mateo, who is associated with a mining company of San Francisco and Tuolumne county.

The theory of the atom; experiments with radio, light and other rays; and the extraction of radium from ore through the use of high voltage were among the things touched upon in Hassell's talk. He exhibited radium, cobalt and other substances, and photographs. He predicted the ultimate discovery of the secrets of gravity. He showed two photographs taken from the top of Mount Hamilton during a fog. One, with an ordinary plate, was unable to pierce the fog; the other, through a special process, showed every detail of the valley below, as far away as Yosemite, just as if there had been no fog.

Emil Steinegger was chairman of the meeting, which was opened and closed by President Al Davies.

The first oil well in the United States was 69 feet deep and was drilled in 1853.

COUNTY PLANNING

Gus B. Risso, 1441 Alvarado avenue, Burlingame, former deputy collector of internal revenue for nine years and a resident of the peninsula for the past 25 years, was named as justice of the peace of the new sixth judicial township, situated in Burlingame, by the supervisors.

Louis A. Cavalier, 1233 Laguna avenue, Burlingame, police chief of that city for seven years during the period of the World War, was named as constable of the new judicial township.

Both appointments were recommended by Dr. C. V. Thompson, supervisor of that district, and were approved by the board on his motion.

Salaries, as fixed by law, are $175 for the justice of the peace, and $165 for the constable.

Both must seek re-election in the August election.

Northern San Mateo county's million dollar vegetable industry is being menaced by lack of appointment by the San Mateo County Board of Supervisors of an agricultural commissioner to succed the late Alonzo W. Tate Jr., the board was informed by Attorney Harry H. Baier.

Baier, representing the Colma Vegetable Growers's Association, said that a carload of beets had been refused in Salem, Ore., because of the alleged existence of weevils in the produce, and that the car had to be reshipped to Seattle at a great loss to the growers.

Baier declares his belief that no weevil exists in the San Mateo county produce, but that the car was refused because San Mateo county has not at present a certified agricultural commissioner. William C. Belcher is acting in the temporary capacity of commissioner and is declared to be using the name of Tate whom the other commissioners know is dead, Baier said.

George Lagomarsino, president of the growers' association, and Frank Cresta, manager, both declared their belief that the San Mateo county produce is weevil free and that the cars will be accepted if approved by a certified commissioner.

Supervisor John Poole, Redwood City, explained the board's delay in saying that examinations were now being held for the post and that the supervisors wish to see some San Mateo county man become eligible for the post. No resident of the peninsula now is certified by the Department of Agriculture, he said.

Wake Up Your Liver Bile —Without Calomel

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at all stores. © 1931, C. M. Co.
